

Emma Smith's talk considers Shakespeare's role in a number of significant world libraries, from eighteenth-century Schluchtern to the Auckland City Library in New Zealand. First Folio distribution tracks large-scale cultural issues: empire, economics, and translation and literary exchange. She speculates about where current sales might take Folios, and how thinking about this book in a global context shifts its significance and value.